Dear Dr. Henney,

I am writing in support of FDA's efforts to strengthen the current FDA proposal on limiting new uses of antibiotics in agriculture. As it stands your proposal does not go far enough. Not a day goes by when I do not read of the already harmful and most likely irreversible effects of antibiotics in animal feed on the human response to those once helpful antibiotics.

Sadly, I no longer look at, let even prepare food produced in this country without feeling endangered and my concerns for future generations mount. Please stop big business and the pursuit of profits from this dangerous practice - and with government's approval. It is to me a question of public health and social responsibility.

Sincerely,

Christine M. Seaman, MD
